A 42-year-old Central Intelligence Agency clerical supervisor was stabbed several times and robbed early yesterday by a chance acquaintance who left him for dead on a Northeast Washington street.

Victim of the assault and robbery was James D. Pembroke, of 5110 Worthington drive in the Westmoreland Hills section of Montgomery County. He is on Casualty Hospital's critical list with numerous stab wounds. He told police he was wounded in a running fight with an assailant who took $40 from his pockets as he lay unconscious near the intersection of Kendall and Gaullaudet sts. ne.

Police flashed a lookout for a 22-year-old Negro identified as Richard Franklin Jr., 22, address unknown, and obtained a warrant charging him with robbery. Pembroke described this sequence of events leading up to the attack:

He was en route to his parked car near 14th and T sts. nw., Thursday evening, when a young man accosted him and offered to arrange a date. After a visit to a tavern together at 2015 14th st. nw., they drove in Pembroke's car to the 1800 block of Corcoran st. ne., where the young man entered an apartment house.

Pembroke waited in the lobby a few minutes, he said, and then returned to his car, having decided against the excursion.

His companion intercepted him, however, and started scuffling when Pembroke told him he had abandoned his original idea. When he saw a knife in the man's hand, Pembroke ran. His attacker pursed slashing at him as they ran west on Corcoran, north on Gaullaudet and west on Kendall, where Pembroke stumbled and collapsed.

Residents of the neighborhood, aroused by Pembroke's yells, called police. Aided by Park Police Sgt. Alfred Beye and his K-9 dog, "Lucky," they recovered a hunting knife in a nearby alley and a neighbor retrieved Pembroke's abandoned wallet, minus the money it had contained.

Police said residents of the apartment house in which Pembroke said he waited identified the man they are seeking.
